SALISBURY, N.C. – More than 700 Ahold Delhaize USA associates are volunteering in communities across the country through the ADUSA Cares Fall Day of Service. Held during Hunger Action Month, the annual initiative includes more than 35 volunteer projects, over 2,000 volunteer hours and charitable donations to nonprofit partners working to address food insecurity and strengthen local communities.

Associates from Ahold Delhaize USA's seven U.S. support office locations are partnering with food banks, community farms and nonprofit organizations through hands-on service projects that support local hunger-relief efforts. Activities include sorting food donations, working in community gardens, assembling care packages and supporting other initiatives that help expand access to food resources in the communities these organizations serve.

"Through our Fall Day of Service, our associates demonstrated our value of care by partnering with organizations on the front lines of hunger relief and community support," said Christy Phillips-Brown, vice president of communications at Ahold Delhaize USA. "Their volunteer efforts, combined with charitable donations through ADUSA Cares, help strengthen local organizations and expand their impact while demonstrating our commitment to the communities where we live and work."

Supporting access to nutritious food and healthier communities is a key focus of ADUSA Cares, the company's community engagement and philanthropy program. Through volunteerism, charitable giving and nonprofit partnerships, the program helps address critical community needs while creating meaningful opportunities for associates to make a positive difference and amplify local impact.

In addition to volunteer support, ADUSA Cares is providing a charitable donation to each participating nonprofit partner to help advance local hunger-relief efforts and expand access to food resources in the communities they serve.
